

Program Description

The Bachelor of Human Sciences and Community Services offers a unique, interdisciplinary curriculum addressing diverse societal challenges. Encompassing human evolution, cultural diversity, sustainability, and societal-environmental interactions, the program equips graduates for pre-professional health roles, research, and community service. Amidst increasing NGO demand, students confront Malawi's familial struggles: insufficient child investment, gender violence, HIV/AIDS, and poverty. By comprehensively understanding human complexities, graduates enact impactful change. Multidisciplinary training in human development, consumer sciences, and nutrition empowers students to manage community challenges with empathy and resourcefulness. Through hands-on experience and research, they cultivate solutions for holistic family and community well-being, making tangible contributions to societal advancement.
